Papa Bob's Gift

I watch the children gather at their papas for the night.

Each of them discussing a past revenge or fight.

Their papa listens to all their stories and what is on their Christmas list.

He tells them he has everything because they are his gift.

He explains that money and toys
could never ever compete,

Against his memories of their pranks
and all their muddy feet.

To hear of this may make some folks sigh,

But to the children's papa, it's a gift that money can't buy.
